- A humorous story which presents a twist of New Year traditions.

English translation is available.

What happens if parents try to stop Santa Claus from delivering presents?

Every year children open up their presents Santa has left them and then they write a letter to him thanking for the gifts. That year some parents who are not so nice decide to open up those letters and read them, which lead them to think that Santa Claus is not that necessary. After all, he makes the parents look bad by bringing them the best presents. If parents can make their children happy, they will no longer need Santa Claus. It is clear what they need to do: They need to stop this tradition for good. The parents hide the presents dropped off by Santa and later give them as their own gifts.

Santa Claus is so sad that he doesn't receive any thank you letters. Days pass by and there is nothing to do. Maybe this is a good chance to go on a holiday? Then again, he has been working without any days off for years and years and he saw the world only in the darkness of the night.

What will happen now? How will parents deal with all the letters written by their kids all year long?

Can a frog live inside a person?

Everything starts with a terrible prank. Turna's big brother convinces her that eggs in the river are miraculous fruits that makes you grow up faster. Turna is fed up with her big brother always treating her like a baby. So why not try one? Finally, she learns that the "miraculous fruit" is in fact a frog's egg and does not help her grow up at all. Turna now has to live with a frog inside her.

The sweet emotions of the girl are described through a family story where we see the father struggling with the search of a new job. As Turna is going on with her daily life, we see how she describes her feelings with the frog. The frog jumps when she gets scared, tickles her tummy when she is excited, bites her stomach when she is jealous or hugs her hearth when she is sad.

The story of the ones in a garbage village versus the ones living in luxury.

Junk Plaza and Elite City: Two totally different worlds in a town. One is a poor ghetto among garbage mountains, the other is a luxurious settlement separated by thick walls and security measures. First, a little boy and his family support themselves by collecting and re-selling what everybody else throws away. In the luminous Elite City next door, there is trouble. Everything is so sterile and people are so well-cared that children's immune system finally crushes down and they start getting sick. A money-hungry private clinic decides to take the issue in hand and plots a dirty plan: Using the children of Junk Plaza as blood donors and transfusing their blood to the children of Elite City.

"Everyone in the world is separated from us by only six people. If this is true, then that means there are also only six people between my dad and me. I can find him."

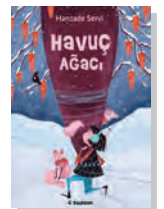

Çakıl's father is lost. He is the private pilot of one of the most famous and wealthy businessmen. On New Year's Eve, he takes a short flight in his plane, but the storm causes it to crash. He is nowhere to be found on steep snowy mountains.

In his backpack there are these three mysterious things: a oddly-shaped cup, a jar containing three seeds and the painting of a dragon signed by someone named Rainy. What's more, recently there is a bestselling YA novel about a pilot and the main character has the same personality as Çakıl's father. The novel also tells about how he crashes his plane. How could this be?

Çakıl learns about the theory of six degrees of separation and she gets so excited. She has a goal now: She will find out who these six people and eventually reach his lost father. Would it really work?

When his editor asks Özgür, a passionate writer of romance novels, to write a horror novel for children, the young man's world falls apart. He will be writing for children in a genre he has no experience in. As soon as possible, he has to push aside his romantic scenarios and start to write about eerie and scary things. As he walks down the street, with question marks in his mind, he comes across a cafe, perhaps the last stop before a series of disasters that will turn his life upside down. Returning home from the cafe with bags full of antiques, Özgür is unaware of the impending danger to him, but every step he takes from now on is a matter of life and death. It's impossible for him to distinguish whether the unimaginable events he will encounter are a nightmare or reality...

The story of a child who is curious about space and stars...

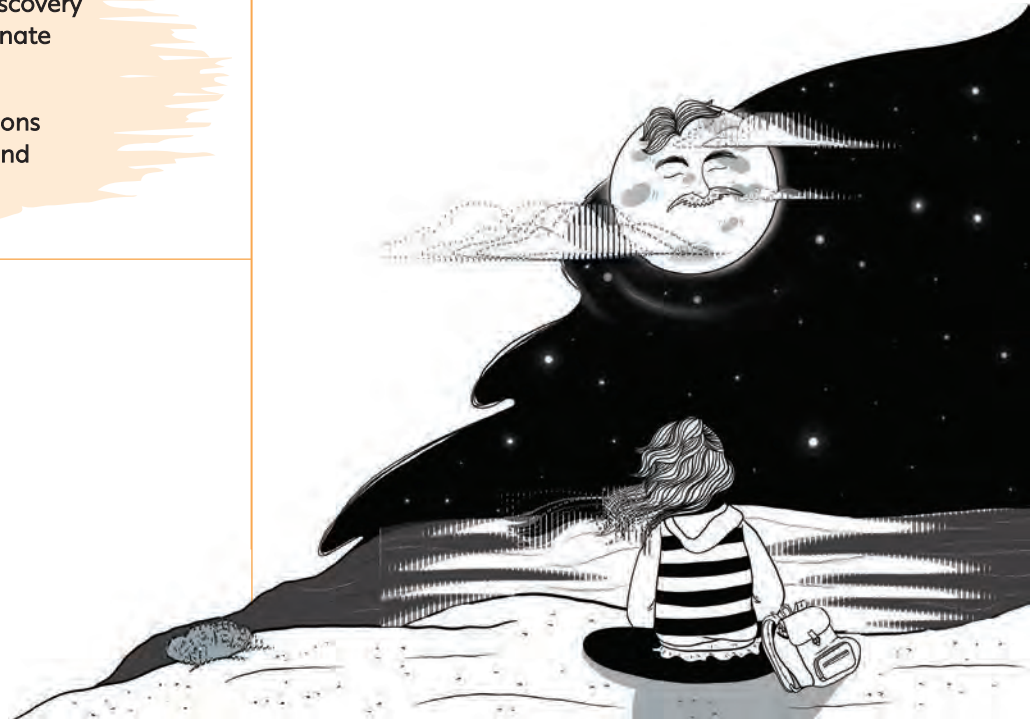

Moonlight is a young girl who looks up to the sky and dreams about the endless glowing stars that lie in the vast emptiness of outer space. One night at the beach, she sets her eyes on the sky and comes across something she never could have expected: Man on the Moon draws near and tells her the fascinating stories of constellations, while sharing his unending wisdom. As he speaks, all the constellations start moving around, turning into the animals and characters which they're named after: a huge bear, Hercules himself, an eagle, a wolf or a rabbit. We, as the readers, become a part of the constellations' amazing awakening all thanks to the special optical illusion technique named kinegram, used in the illustrations that accompany the story.

KEY NOTES:

The portrait of a lonely woman who's at the verge of madness.

The Yellow Wallpaper is a succinct catalogue of a woman's descent into madness while she is under the constant care of her physician husband. The story is notably titled "The Yellow Wallpaper" because of the woman's obsession with the wallpaper in the bedroom that she is confined to during her prescribed bed rest over a summer. The wallpaper serves as a powerful metaphor throughout the story, and masterfully highlights the oppression of women during this era.
